Sectarian References of Political Position of Nizārī Ismāʿīlīs in 11th and 12th centuries

Dücane Demirtaş

HIST221.01
Oya PANÇAROĞLU
December 25, 2017
Reinterpretation of Quran and hadith, both of which had been mainly seen two basic sources of Islam, was a critical issue of the late 8th century when the last tabiins were died. Esbah-i nüzul which only could place each verse of Quran in the context of early 6th century of Mecca and Medina gave way to diversified interpretations of Quran in new conquered lands, especially in Zoroastrian culture of Iran and in Hellenistic culture of Near East.

However, these varied theological understandings on the basic sources of Islam to disclose its “real interpretation” were related to politics more than theology. Before cahilliyye, Banu Hashim and Banu Umayya were two dominant families in Mecca, which had always conflicted with each other to control governance of the city and the struggle rose again when Prophet was died in 632. The critical turning points were the murder of third caliphate Uthman, being family member of Banu Umayya and be accused of usurping the divine right to rule of Ali given by Prophet Muhammed, and rising of Muaviye who also member of Umayya clan and claimed sovereignty against the caliphate of Ali, being Hashimi. After the murder of Hussein, son of Ali, by Yazid in 680, most of the opponents against Umayyads gathered around uninstitutionalized Shia identity. However, it had more adopted in newly conquered areas, like Iran, rather than being localized under the theme “usurpation” of divine right to rule of ahlal Beyt in specific area, which also means most of pre-Islamic elements in these regions faced theological syncretism in a political resistance form against Umayyads and Abbasids. Notion of usurpation relating to victimized Shia identity revealed probably the same reaction under the theme Arab invasion and Turkish rule in Iran and a required

1 The term is used for those who saw the companions of prophet Muhammed, named sahabe.
2 Which means “the reasons of reveletion” in the Islamic studies.
5 Farhad Daftary, The Isma’ilis Their History and Doctrines, 56,57.
religious legitimation for opponents were provided with esoteric exegesis of Quran and hadith, namely batmi tev’il, which had also included serious neo-Plotanic influence.7

Ismailism was one of the first sect of Shia, which systemized this batmi interpretation8 of basic sources of Islam for political purposes,9 and had an influence on the people from Samarkand to Northern Africa through its daïs.10 When Fatimids became independent state in 909 under Ubeydullâh el-Mehdi and in a short time took Egypt, Syria and Hijaz, Ismailism institutionalized official Shia identity by creating Al-Ahzar madrasa in Cairo, religious institution, and constructing a theology that included imamet theory of Sultans.11 After the death of Fatimids caliphate el-Mûstensir-billah (1094), two successors, Nizar and Ebu’l Kasim Ahmed struggled for the throne and Nizar executed after his defeat.12 Nizari Ísmaili movement that was organized as an opponent group doctrinizing that their imam’s right to rule was usurped by Ebu’l Kasim Ahmed constructed a state like organization in Iran, Syria and Iraq and advanced their batmi exegesis for religious legitimation of their political actions over the region in 11th and 12th centuries.13

Nizari Ísmailism began to systemize its institution in Iran, geostrategic location of which was most important because of its near position to Abbasids caliphate in Iraq and its roots through Central Asia and India, by Abd al-Malik bin Attash in nearly 1067’s.14 However, there were more reasons of why it succeeded to spread over Iran, relating to becoming visible Shia identity in Iranian society that had displeasure against Arab and Turkish invasions. When Hasan Sabbah took the title hujja in the community after *.abd al-

---

8 Öztürk, 149.
10 Öztürk, 70, 74.
11 Öztürk, 74, 75.
13 Ibid., 200, 201
14 Farhad Daftary, Ismailis in Medieval Muslim Societies, 126.
Malik bin Attash’s return to Egypt, he organized and advanced it in stricter political manner and succeeded a serious uprising in Iran against Sunni Seljuks in 1080’s\textsuperscript{15}, which showed that Ismaili dawa was not a secret belief in Iranian society\textsuperscript{16} but it’s a sort of national sentiment that could help it to find openly supporters in most of the cities in Iran.\textsuperscript{17} Adding that they were the first major sectarian group in Islam, using Persian as religious language, we can clearly relate their hostile notion on “aliens”, mostly Arabs and Turks, with this Iranian identity.\textsuperscript{18} Looking at critical figures in Nizari Ismaili dawa, being mostly Iranians, and Hasan Sabbah’s origin, borned in Qum and educated in Rey that was one of the center of Ismaili school in 11\textsuperscript{th} century,\textsuperscript{19} sectarian roots depending on national sentiment can disclose organized hostility against Sunni-Seljuk authority in Iran. Political actions of dais, categorizing their assassination lists, focused on Sunni governors in Iran and Iraq like imams, kadhs, alims, amirs, sultans and viziers.\textsuperscript{20} We have more than 50 significant names between 11\textsuperscript{th} and 12\textsuperscript{th} centuries, who assassinated by Nizari Ismailis, included Sultan Berkyaruk and Davud bin Sultan Mahmud and Vizier Nizam-ul Mulk\textsuperscript{21} that condemned Nizari Ismailism in his Siyasetname.\textsuperscript{22}

Doctrine of the movement, named ta’lim that had been further described by Hasan Sabbah,\textsuperscript{23} based on “absolute authority to interpret law and inscriptions by imams rather than icma”.\textsuperscript{24} So, Imams being in ahlal Bayt were “Quran-i Natiq”\textsuperscript{25}, who only could reveal esoteric meaning of Quran in distinction between tenzil that is understandable interpretation.

\textsuperscript{15} Farhad Daftary, Ismailis in Medieval Muslim Societies, 129.
\textsuperscript{16} Ibid., 132
\textsuperscript{17} Ibid., 131, 132
\textsuperscript{18} Ibid., 131 “Turks are jinns, not humans, they were not sons of Adam”
\textsuperscript{19} Ibid., 131
\textsuperscript{21} Ibid., 242.
\textsuperscript{22} Farhad Daftary, “The ‘Order of the Assassins’: J. von Hammer and the Orientalist Misrepresentations of the Nizari Ismailis” (Iranian Studies, 2006: 71-81), 73.
\textsuperscript{23} Farhad Daftary, Ismailis in Medieval Muslim Societies, 128.
\textsuperscript{24} Jorunn J. Buckley, “The Nizârî İsmâ’îlîtes’ Abolishment of the sharî’a during the ”Great Resurrection“ of 1164 A.D./559 A.H.” (Studia Islamica, 1984: 137-165), 139.
of revelation received by the prophet and te’vîl that is esoteric exegesis of Quran by the imams.\(^{26}\) Before defying batîni-zahîri distinction in Nizari İsmailis, to find out how imams were, without any dispute, religious leaders, which further provided them with strong legitimation argument for their political purposes. They were sources of te’vîl\(^{27}\) and without them the sacred book would be meaningless.\(^{28}\) Imams also infallible\(^{29}\) and supreme teachers.

The base of doctrine is contrast between zahîri, being visible/ discoverable/understandable/ interpretable/ inferable by everyone, and batîni, being invisible/indiscoverable/ uninterpretable/ esoteric, exegesis of religious sources and also everything in the universe.\(^{30}\) Most of the terms used in Quran such as the earth,\(^{31}\) sky,\(^{32}\) mountains\(^{33}\) and trees\(^{34}\) were described in the form of their batîni meanings, which was defined only by imams and they had no any significant base of Islamic studies in the contemporary interpretations works of 11\(^{th}\) and 12\(^{th}\) centuries but their political context that led them to construct changeable exegesis.\(^{35}\) This Batîni interpretation also divided and reconstructed basic orders of the religion. For instance, al wudu’, ablution, is not only to clean from any dirties or to wash for the rituals but means also to purify with the truth received by imams\(^{36}\) whereas salah, prayer, is to accept Ismaili dawa\(^{37}\) and savm, fasting, is to keep secrets into community\(^{38}\) and hajj, pilgrimage, is to face with Imam, which is because he is batîni symbol of kaba.\(^{39}\) We see also abolishment of sharia, which disclose itself in two bases. The former is a doctrine in which contemporary imams and those who take title hujja were equalized

---

\(^{26}\) Poonawala, 372.
\(^{27}\) Ferhad Daftary and Gurdofarid Miskinzoda, 152.
\(^{28}\) Ibid., 154
\(^{29}\) Buckley, 140.
\(^{30}\) Öztürk, 214.
\(^{31}\) Poonawala, 379.
\(^{32}\) Ibid., 381.
\(^{33}\) Ibid., 382.
\(^{34}\) Ibid., 383.
\(^{35}\) Öztürk, 329, 330, 331.
\(^{36}\) Ibid., 404, 405.
\(^{37}\) Ibid., 406, 407.
\(^{38}\) Ibid., 409, 410.
\(^{39}\) Ibid., 413, 415.
with prophet Muhammad\textsuperscript{40} and the latter is to construct distinction between prophet related \textit{sharia} and imams related \textit{sharia}.\textsuperscript{41} So, that led us to theory how Nizari İsmailis movement existed in 11\textsuperscript{th} and 12\textsuperscript{th} centuries as a political reaction, getting support of both those who had \textit{ahlal Bayt} identity in the idea of “usurpation” of caliphate of Ali and his sons and those who had displeasure in newly conquered lands and trying to protect their identities against Arab and Turkish invasions. Hence, Nizari İsmailis grew up as a religion-politics movement using utilitarian perspective to interpret of the basic sources of Islam and construct a theological legitimation.

Farhad Daftary and Gurdofarid Miskinzoda in their books, named “The Study of Shi’i Islam History, Theology and Law” focus on the structures of how Shia identity existed and legalized itself in the forms of theology and law. Three articles in the first chapter give historical information of early Shi’i existence and its sectarian developments, specifically under the Ismailism. Second chapter, “The Quran and its Shi’i interpretation”, which we used mostly, try to connect historical developments of sectarian division of Shia with different interpretations of basic sources of Islam, which included how esoteric exegesis in the early Shi’i understanding advanced and related to political context of 9\textsuperscript{th}, 10\textsuperscript{th}, 11\textsuperscript{th} and 12\textsuperscript{th} centuries. First 3 chapters of the book is very important to cite theological means of early Shiism and its process towards modern times, which can also disclose how Shia, from its origin to its basic sources, related to political issues in the context of each Shi’i interpretation, specifically Ismaili works.

Farhad Daftary’s other book, named “The Ismailis Their History and Doctrines” is more around relations between Ismaili doctrine that historically changed with political issues, which gives us a linear process of theological understanding in three period, Fatimid, Alamut and post-Alamut period. The book explains specific terms belonging Ismaili terminology in their context and categorizes each sectarian division in Ismailism according to their historical background. He allocated Nizari Ismailism in its early stage and its development over Iran and Iraq, listing each political figure from early stage to Aga Khan, modern period of Nizari Ismailism.

\textsuperscript{40} Buckley, 144.
\textsuperscript{41} Ibid., 144.

The article of Daftary, “The "Order of the Assassins:" J. von Hammer and the Orientalist Misrepresentations of the Nizari Ismailis” on Iranian Studies is a review article which focus on how orientalist view described Nizari Ismailis in a fantastic figure that completely is misrepresented. Author criticize Joseph von Hammer's “Assassins” book, claiming that rather than describing Nizari Ismailism in its historical context by using primary sources of important Nizari figures, orientalist view, in the example of J. von Hammer, uses most popular two sources which depended their thoughts on “hostility” against Ismailism, medieval Sunni and Crusader sources. He tries to disproof sectarian and anachronistic biases and beliefs of both Sunni and Crusader approach on Nizari Ismailism and giving specific examples to historicize events in their context. This book is important to see what is difference between fabricated description of orientalist view and contextualism of Daftary.

Master’s thesis of Ayşe Atıcı “Büyük Selçuklu İmparatorluğunda Batıni Hareketi, Hasan Sabbah ile İlk Halefleri ve İran Nizari İsmailileri” gives us total look for Nizari İsmaili’s historical developments but more for its political influence in the period 11th and 12th century in Iran against Seljuks rule. Author depended most of the events in her thesis on primary sources and criticizes many primary sources that included different narratives on the same event rather than simply citing historical events by using specific sources. Although focusing more on how Nizari Ismaili affected Seljuks governance in Iran and Iranian society in the period of 10th, 11th and 12th centuries, she simply defines Nizari doctrine, lacking of systemizing a correlation between religious doctrine and political issues in their context.
The book of Mustafa Öztürk, named “Kuran ve Aşıri Yorum, Tefsirde Batılılık ve Batıni Tefsir Geleneği”, is one of the extensive work on how Shia existed, and its interpretation of Quran changed in historical process. Author firstly explained basic doctrine of batıni view and focus on the term batıni te’vil and before specifically explanation of batıni exegesis by opening a title for each one he revealed hermeneutic influence on batıni te’vil tradition. Author, in the third and fourth chapter, tries to show doctrinal forms of batıni te’vil on political issues after giving specific historical information about political effects of Ismailism on Egypt, Iraq, Yemen, Iran and Syria. Looking at the bibliography of the book, having more than 450 works and included a lot of primary sources in the content of each chapter, Mustafa Öztürk contextualizes base of religious thought of Ismailism by relating most of the batıni doctrine to political issues in the 10th, 11th and 12th centuries.

Jorunn J. Buckley, in his article “The Nizārī ismā‘īlītes' Abolishment of the sharī'a during the "Great Resurrection" of 1164A.D./559 A.H.” issued reinterpretation of sharia in the late 12th century when Nizari Ismailis constructed their authority over Iran and Iraq and how their political figures, imams and hujjas, reinstituted exegesis of law in the sense of getting supreme authority. Buckley, specifically, focus on replacement of sharia and on how new “qiyama” thesis of Nizari leaders played a role in the abolishment of sharia. He gives historical background of new sectarian approach in Nizari Ismailis, describing in its political context of leaders in Alamut after Hasan Sabbah. The article can be seen supplementary means to understand how Ismaili movement evolved its religious understanding from beginning that was related to more or less Islamic discourse to the 12th and 13th century when sectarian identity of the movement became more related to localized political issues.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

http://www.islamansiklopedisi.info/dia/pdf/c33/c330141.pdf
